In Georgia, the West Mims Fire in the Okefenokee National Wildlife Refuge has burned 129,746 (+18,114) acres. Ten helicopters are conducting air attacks in the southeast corner of the fire. The containment date remains November 1.

Inspector General

Summary: Company Pleads Guilty to Concealing Violation of the Clean Water Act

Report Date: April 10, 2017

OIG initiated an investigation after receiving allegations that Champion Technologies Inc. (Champion), and four other companies concealed oil sheens from a Gulf of Mexico offshore oil platform, and altered water samples prior to testing mandated by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). The purpose of the testing was to ensure that water discharged into the Gulf of Mexico during offshore operations met environmental standards.

We conducted a joint investigation with EPA's Criminal Investigation Division and found that between 2010 and 2012, employees of an offshore oil and gas facility operator purchased 4,025 gallons of a chemical product from Champion, and both companies knew the chemical would be used to conceal the unauthorized discharge of hydrocarbons into the Gulf of Mexico. Our investigation also confirmed that employees working for the offshore facility operator had actually used the dispersant to conceal oil sheens during their operations in violation of the Clean Water Act. We did not substantiate the allegation that one of the companies altered water samples.

The offshore facility operator dissolved its business operations through bankruptcy proceedings. Champion pled guilty to misprision of a felony and was subsequently sentenced to a $1,000,000 fine, $250,000 for community service, and a $400 special assessment. This is a summary of a report of investigation issued to the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement.

Secretary Zinke Travels To Utah To Start National Monuments Tour.

The Washington Times (5/7, Wolfgang) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke on Sunday “launched a ‘listening tour’ across Utah designed to quell an uproar over his department’s controversial review of national monuments.” Zinke is “spearheading a federal study of more than two dozen land and marine monuments following an executive order from President Trump last month.” According to the article, “the process is likely to lead to the first revocation of a U.S. monument, though there are still outstanding legal questions about whether a president has the power to make such a rescission.”

The AP (5/7, Price, McCombs) reports that Zinke will “spend Sunday in Salt Lake City before traveling Monday to the southeastern corner of Utah to spend time in the Bears Ears area.” The AP (5/7, Price, McCombs) reports that Zinke and is scheduled to spend Monday morning touring Bears Ears National Monument “by helicopter as the Interior secretary sets out on day two of a four-day Utah visit to re-assess two vast national monuments.” On Tuesday, “he plans to tour the area on horseback.” On Wednesday, Zinke will be in the area near the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument.

National Monument Advocates Hold Protest.

The AP (5/7) reports that “more than 500 protesters urging the protection of Utah’s Bears Ears National Monument demonstrate outside a Salt Lake City building where Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke is meeting with tribal leaders.” According to the article, “protesters carried signs Sunday and shouted ‘Save our monuments, stand with Bears Ears!’ as Zinke started a four-day Utah trip.”

Interior Department Releases List of 27 National Monuments Under Review.

The Wall Street Journal (5/5, Carlton) reports that the Interior Department has published a list of 27 national monuments and marine preserves that are now under review either to be downsized or eliminated, which the Journal says includes Bears Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante in Utah. The 27 monuments and preserves represent 210 million acres and they all were either created or expanded by former Presidents Bill Clinton and Barack Obama. The Journal says the review is being welcomed by those who have complained in recent years about government overreach in its control of Federal lands.

Interior Department Suspends Advisory Panels.

E&E Publishing (5/5, Streater) reports that the Interior Department is “formally reviewing the ‘charter and charge’ of more than 200 advisory panels that assist federal agencies managing hundreds of millions of acres of public lands at a time when the Trump administration is considering significant changes to land-use designations and management practices.” Heather Swift, an Interior spokeswoman, said that the review is part of an ongoing effort by Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke aimed at “restoring trust in the Department’s decision-making.” Swift said the review of “the charter and charge of each Board/Advisory Committee” is designed to “maximize feedback from these boards and ensure their compliance with the Federal Advisory Committee Act.”

King Cove Residents’ Hopes Rise For Road Through Izembek Refuge.

The Bristol Bay (AK) Times (5/5, Martinson) reports that residents of King Cove are “cautiously optimistic” that a road through the Izembek National Wildlife Refuge “might happen, under the guiding force of the new Trump administration.” Residents “say they’ve exhausted other options: Lives are at risk — rough weather that prevents flying out of King Cove means costly and time-sensitive air extractions are required for sick and hurt residents.” Also, “they say that the people of King Cove, especially Natives, should have the right to cross the land.”

Oil Companies Exploring Challenge To Gulf Of Mexico Drilling Ban.

The Hill (5/7, Henry) reports that “oil groups this week said they are eyeing potential exploration in the eastern Gulf, a prospect buoyed by the Trump administration’s recent review of federal offshore drilling policies.” Drilling within 125 miles of Florida’s Gulf Coast is currently banned, but “with that ban expiring in 2022 and President Trump pushing for expanded oil development offshore,” energy companies are hoping to win approval of more exploration while environmental groups are preparing to fight to extend the ban. Energy companies see the section of the Gulf of Mexico covered by the ban as “an oil-rich section of the sea that contains up to 2.35 billion barrels of oil, according to federal estimates.”

According to the article, “along with this year’s $110 million deficit, the USVI is facing ongoing structural deficits of around $170 million per year out of a locally funded budget of around $850 million.” Part 1 looks “at the history of the territory’s finances and some of the many factors that led to this crossroads.” In part 2, the St. Croix Source (4/16, Kossler) takes a closer look at the 2012 closure of Hovensa. In part 3, the St. Croix Source (4/24, Kossler), highlights the growing insolvency of the Government Employee Retirement Plan. In part 4, the St. Croix Source (5/1, Kossler) analyzes whether the problem is “the growing debt or is it spending that leads to deficits that expand the debt?”
